Academic Experience and Activities

- 2009 – now: President of an international charitable society
- I am the founder and president of Giving What We Can, an international society for people committed to donating at least 10% of their income to wherever it can do the most to fight global poverty. This involves advocacy for giving much more than is typical, and research into the empirics and ethics of priority setting. I have provided advice on these matters to senior officials at 10 Downing St, DFID, the WHO, and other organisations. We currently have more than 1,600 members (from 50 countries), including a number of prominent academics in moral philosophy and development economics. Together our members have committed to give more than $600 million.

Teaching Experience

- 2005 – now: Tutorials, University of Oxford
Ethics, Formal Logic, Mill's Utilitarianism, Introduction to Logic.
- 2009 – now: Lectures, University of Oxford
I have given one-off lectures on: global poverty, climate change, the ethics of vegetarianism, and the relationship between ethics and economics.

2011 – now: Seminars, University of Oxford

I co-convened eight-week 2-hour graduate seminars on moral uncertainty, on effective altruism, and on population ethics. I also run seminars for the BPhil class Practical Ethics.

2011 – now: Examining, University of Oxford

I have been an Assessor for the BPhil (2013–14). I have marked finals scripts for the Ethics paper and examination essays for the BPhil subject History of Philosophy 1800–1950. I have also been the internal examiner for a DPhil thesis.
